Roger Pryor and His Success. General Pryor has preved how well a south+ ern man can succeed in New York. The war swept away his property, and he found himself with a family of seven children and without a dollar. Then he was not a lawyer; for no soon. er had he put up his shingle when he was a young man than he was taken up by the Virginians and sent to Congress and kept there. Advertisement of a farnished house was the singular fact which led him to New York. He had no friends there on whom he could calculate for aid, but this was no obstacle. The editor of the Freeman's Journal sought out the southerner, and on learning that he wascasting about for work advised him to begin the practice of law, remembering the forensic ability displayed by Pryor in Congress. Ben. Wood, of the Daily News, pur General Peyor's name down on his list of salaried edi-torial writers, and told him to assept the salary as long as it was useful and to write when he felt like it. General Pryor borrowed the law books, which he needed to begin the study requisite to enable him to do justice to his clients, and he studied as he fought—bravely. No man has bursed the midnight oil more, and from being no lawser at all twelve years ago, he has grown to be a most accomplished and crudite member of the bar. In his great speech in the trial of Tilton against Beecher, in resisting the attempt of William M. Evarts, of Beacher's counsel, to prevent the plaintiff from testifying, General Pryor hurled law at the head of the present Secretary of State, which the latter in all of his delving had not reached, and Mr. Evarts relaxed his frigidity to warmly compliment General Pryor not only upon the brilliant presentation of the law, but upon his extended acquaintance with the authorities. General Pryor's speech wen the point for Tilton. Last week, before the Court of Appeals. General Pryor, in arguing the case against the Brooklyn aldermen, who were endeavering to keep Con-gressman Daniel O'Reilly, a member of their Board at the same time that he was serving at Washington, made an argument which the habitues of the Court of Appeals pronounced as surpassingly powerful and elequent, and which elicited a letter of praise from the Atterney General of the State. It is the habit of General Pryor not to tako a case unless he believes He established the novel point in the courts of this city some time ago that it was cruelty within the meaning of the law for a man to falsely accuse his wife of infidelity, and he made that the basis of a suit for a limited divorce, which he won. Seven hours a day he studies law. No man in New York has a more brilliant future. Gen. Pryor has never taken even the first step toward political preferment, and to day rests under the political disabilities imposed upon him at the close of the war, which he has never sought to have removed, although he

Y. Cor. St. Louis Rep. DON'T MIND SNAKE BITES, -A envious exhibition was given in Dr. Dancan Eve's rear office yesterday moralog. Dr. H. Shacklett and M. O. He was bitten on the wrist by the rattlesnake, and the wound bled. He at one; applied the remedy to the wound and took it internally. His pulse had beat at 81, temperature 90. At the end of fifteen minutes from the bite the pulse had tisen to 91 and the temperature to 1011 degrees; fifteen minutes more his pu'se was 92 and temperature 100; in one hour from the time of the bite the pulse beat at 90, while the temperature maked 984. At this point of the proceedings Colucs suflered with a nauseated stomach, and remarked hat he had tried the same experiment with a rattlesnake at Centreville last Monday; that the two experiments had been two close together, and they would not catch him making experiments without a greater lapse of time between

GENIUS IN LABELS.-An old newspaper man from Ohio has started a drug store in Detroit. A local paper, commenting on his innovation, remarks that he will be a millionaire within the next three years, or "bust" in less than six months. His store is very cheerful. Skulls, erneibles, forceps, chromos, l'also teeth, boncs, almanaes, parrots, and sticks of liquorice are scattered around in delightful profusion, and there isn't a drawer or bottle without an original label. On one drawer he hes: "Glueshe sticks right by you, no matter what the weather." On another: "Copperase—eat slow and chew fine." On another: Paris Green—sure in its operation, lasting in its off c.s." The label on one bottle reads: "Buy some of me and stop that blamed cough." Of another, "Prussic acid-don't fool around with a revol-Hanging against the wall is a beautiful sigo, which read: 'If you don't want to ask for a fine tooth comb, point your finger at me.' ver."
